Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to contribute to the literature of educational translation by exploring four questions:

1. What are the economic, institutional, social, and emotional barriers to implementing learning research and evidence-based practices?
2. What are the myths and misconceptions (e.g., learning styles, false growth mindset) that hinder progress, and what makes them so challenging to dislodge?
3. What existing and emerging areas of research (e.g., belonging, psychological safety, multimedia learning, cognitive load theory, expert blind spot) are particularly important for educators to be aware of and draw upon?
4. How can we use new technologies and modalities (e.g., Generative AI, AR, VR, online, hybrid, self-paced) in ways that foster deep, meaningful, connected learning, and fully utilize the skill and humanity of teachers?

We welcome manuscripts that explore these questions with nuance and insight. All manuscripts must be solidly grounded in the scholarship of teaching and learning. While empirical studies are preferred, systematic reviews and thoughtful commentaries are also welcome.
