Message from the Guest Editors

The purpose of this Special Issue is to collect relevant studies from both the EU and other countries to identify measures to reduce energy poverty, to achieve a faster and easier transition towards the use of renewable resources in energy production, and to promote actions for the development of investments in the field of energy in order to reduce the level of dependence on imports. These measures, actions, and projects can be incorporated into the energy policies of EU countries, in specific laws such as the law on poverty reduction, or targeting social protection measures for vulnerable energy consumers. Additionally, this Special Issue aims to promote some good practices and quality interdisciplinary research on the factors, limits, risks, and opportunities for smart energy consumption based on an increased share of renewable sources, increased energy efficiency, policy recommendations addressing wider energy access, increased affordability for individuals, and closing the gap between SMEs and energy poverty.
