Qualitative control and analysis of food products is a requirement for food industries. Food analysis is requesting the development of more robust, efficient, sensitive, and cost-effective analytical methodologies. Fundamental and state-of-the-art methods of the development, optimization, and practical implementation in laboratories, and validation of these methods for the food monitoring are employed. Methodologies for food microbial contaminants, food chemistry and toxicology, food quality, food authenticity and traceability are important to be presented and discussed. The application of “omics” in food analysis (such as metabolomics), and a general overview on the new discipline of Foodomics can be discussed. Statistical analyses are also a tool for the qualitative analysis of food, which, in conjunction with other tools, such as chemometrics, can aid in the direction of food safety.
