Message from the Guest Editor

In the last few years, thoracic surgery has been experiencing a tremendous development in terms of new technologies, and innovations in minimally invasive approaches and in integrated strategies for oncological treatments.

This Special Issue aims to collect new evidence on the safety, efficacy and reproducibility of minimally invasive techniques, such as Uniportal-VATS and RATS, in lung, mediastinal and esophageal diseases.

Original research articles and reviews are welcome.

Research areas may include (but are not limited to) the following:

- Current evidence on NSCLC pathogenesis, modern strategies for integrated treatment and future perspectives;
- Novel endoscopic diagnostic and therapeutic techniques in thoracic surgery;
- Minimally invasive thoracic surgery (VATS and RATS);
- New anesthesiology and pain management strategies in thoracic surgery.

I look forward to receiving your contributions.
