Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aligns with our core mission of disseminating comprehensive research findings encompassing both experimental and theoretical aspects within these areas. This Special Issue places a spotlight on the importance of judgment and decision making in the auditing profession. We invite researchers to contribute their work to deepen our understanding and facilitate the evaluation and improvement of judgments, decisions, or choices in a broadly defined auditing context. This encompasses various factors, including audit tasks, auditor characteristics, and interpersonal interactions among auditors and other stakeholders in the financial reporting process. Researchers are encouraged to draw insights from fields such as social psychology, organizational behavior, sociology, economics, and other relevant theories to conduct a comprehensive investigation into judgment and decision making in auditing. This Special Issue will enrich our journal's multifaceted discourse and contribute to our understanding of the intricacies involved in auditing, financial oversight, and accountability. We look forward to receiving your submissions.
