Message from the Guest Editors

Economic and business aspects of circular economy and sustainable practices and strategies are crucial worldwide issues for the wine sector.

Intensive winegrowing, industrialized wine production, modern transportation, and logistics and distribution systems are known to negatively affect natural resources. In recent decades, several environmental problems connected with the wine sector have emerged.

This Special Issue mainly covers the assessment of economic and business performance in the wine sector from a sustainability perspective.

Literature reviews, theoretical explorations, research articles, experimental or case study analyses in agricultural economics, commodity science, economics, management and marketing, geography, rural sociology, viticulture, agroecology, environmental studies, and related fields, as well as interdisciplinary studies, are sought and encouraged. All studies should include meaningful assessments of the economic and commercial aspects in the context of sustainability approaches for the wine market.
