Message from the Editors-in- Chief

At its best, academic publishing facilitates the communication of the latest research results, accelerates sharing new and verified knowledge, and creates synergies between researchers in answering society's most fundamental questions. The new journal J-Multidisciplinary Scientific Journal will be an integral part of a framework that contributes to the immediate availability of all scientifically sound research output, including negative results and replication studies. Articles submitted to J will be peer-reviewed solely on the basis of scientific soundness and accuracy, without dwelling on the question of significance—for which journal editors are often poor judges. The research community will see new ideas made quickly available and an increased level of synergy. Industry players, policy-makers, and the general public will additionally benefit by gaining barrier-free access to the latest research.

Aims

J (ISSN 2571-8800) is an international, peer-reviewed, multidisciplinary, open access journal, which provides an advanced forum for high-quality original research across the entire range of natural and applied sciences. J is dedicated to publishing high-quality research outputs to make these results available to the relevant scientific communities shortly after peer-review. Our goal is to improve fast dissemination of new research results and ideas, and to allow research groups to build new studies, innovations and knowledge without delay. There is no restriction on the maximum length of the papers. Electronic files and software regarding the full details of calculations or experimental procedures, if unable to be published in a normal way, can be deposited as supplementary electronic material.
