Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

In 2024's post-pandemic world, innovation is a necessity for survival. In this world where artificial intelligence seems to be taking the upper hand, it is no longer about survival of the fittest but of the brightest, and the intellectual brilliance of people, organizations and societies may be measured by innovation.

Quite crucially, knowledge management and organizational learning are two forms of reasoning and acting that foster innovation.

The expectation for this Special Issue is to address these gaps by exploring the intersection of knowledge management, innovation, and human behavior in the post-COVID era. This could involve examining the role of artificial intelligence in fostering creativity and collaboration, the impact of different leadership styles on knowledge sharing and innovation, and the potential for using technology to facilitate more inclusive and equitable knowledge sharing and collaboration. Ultimately, the goal is to provide practical insights and recommendations for organizations seeking to enhance their knowledge management and innovation practices in the new work environment.
