

Roads Leading to Self-Employment

Guest Editors:

Prof. Dr. Dieter Bögenhold

Institute of Sociology, University in Klagenfurt, 9020 Klagenfurt,
Austria

Prof. Dr. Robert D. Hisrich

Department of Marketing and Entrepreneurship, Kent State University, Kent, OH 44240, USA

Deadline for manuscript
submissions:

closed (30 June 2020)

Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This special issue takes up a topic which is concerned with entry processes into self-employment analysed from various disciplinary perspectives. Historical, sociological, economic, psychological, geographical and other lenses may be employed. As diverse as the faces of self-employment are with respect to the sizes of economic firms and which are their sectors and concrete activities (Marshall & Gigliotti 2018), either firms run by an individual or by a team with or without further employees (Bögenhold 2019 a), or varying philosophies on pursuing business, as well as in combination with various other goals and preferences in life (Conen & Schippers 2019), ambitions or failing ambitions relating to growth, and historical and geographical variations (Gindling & Newhouse 2014).on those factors, that is how diverse the roads leading to self-employment are (Cieslik and Dvoulety,2019)...

Prof. Dieter Bögenhold

Prof. Robert D. Hisrich

Guest Editor

