The special issue on Poultry Virology and Vaccines is a comprehensive collection of research articles that aims to provide a platform for scientists and researchers to share their latest findings and advancements in the field of poultry virology and vaccination. This special issue focuses on various aspects of poultry virology, including the identification and characterization of viral pathogens affecting poultry health, the epidemiology and transmission dynamics of poultry viruses, and the development and evaluation of effective vaccines.

The scope of this special issue encompasses a wide range of topics related to poultry virology and vaccines. It covers the molecular aspects of viral replication, host immune responses, and the development of diagnostic tools for early detection of viral infections in poultry. Additionally, it explores different vaccination strategies, such as live attenuated vaccines, inactivated vaccines, subunit vaccines, and vector-based vaccines, and their effectiveness in controlling viral diseases in poultry.
