Forage and Feedstuff Digestion Kinetics in Ruminants

Message from the Guest Editor

Forage and Feedstuff Digestion Kinetics in Ruminants is a topic of great interest to understand the degradation of feed, not in the least given the increasing pressure to reduce enteric methane production. The time has come to collect knowledge from research undertaken with many methodologies used to determine degradation kinetics, advantages and disadvantage, results from kinetic studies and the applicability of the results. I invite you to submit a manuscript to this special issue where we can collect the state of the art knowledge and results. Topics of interest include, but not limited to, methodology comparisons, fiber degradation, enzyme influences, methane production, microbiome profiles and structural and functional metagenomics.
