

Counseling Psychology in Different Settings: Practice and Implications

Guest Editors:

Dr. Eirini Karakasidou

Department of Psychology,
Panteion University of Social and Political Sciences, 17671 Athens,
Greece

Dr. Anastassios Stalikas

Lab of Positive Psychology,
Department of Psychology,
Panteion University of Social and Political Sciences, 17671 Athens,
Greece

Deadline for manuscript
submissions:

closed (30 June 2023)

Message from the Guest Editors

Counselling psychology deals with the promotion of the normal functioning of individuals, groups and organizations, on a personal and interpersonal level, but also across the whole life span, in terms of prevention, education and intervention. Counselling psychology can be applied in a multitude of contexts, such as in dealing with psychological disorders and promoting well-being, in family life, in relationships and marriage, in school and university, in career guidance and work, in sports settings and health issues, but also in specific issues and needs such as in refugee populations, disability, cases of domestic violence and in relation to LGBT+ community issues. This Special Issue aims at providing new knowledge on the applications and interventions of counselling psychology in different settings and populations, to inform about new, innovative developments and practices, as well as relevant implications and concerns in today's demanding era, with its challenges.

