Message from the Guest Editors

The negative effects of pandemic and war have extended to both citizens and health services, reducing and slowing down both various ordinary activities and health-promotion activities, for example, in schools and educational settings, hospitals, and clinical settings.

Despite this, we believe that the difficulties experienced can be transformed into opportunities, which can be much more durable and sustainable.

That is why we invite health-promotion services or psychological health services (HSPs) to submit work, studies or experiences that highlight the value of their activities both with regard to this historical period and within the scope of their own activities.
