Message from the Guest Editor

As the COVID-19 pandemic lasts for almost 3 years, millions of people worldwide have been affected. The infection with the SARS-COV-2 virus rises serious healthcare problems aggravated by the not so uncommon long COVID-19 syndrome. Although many experts have tried to determine the mechanism responsible for the associated cardiovascular alterations, there remain a lot of unknowns. The treatment of cardio-vascular pathologies caused by the SARS-COV-2 infection continues to be very challenging for healthcare professionals around the globe.

The scope of this special issue is to publish ground breaking researches on the pathophysiology and new therapeutic approaches in patients with and recovering from COVID-19.
