Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

Thyroid cancer (TC) ranked 9th in terms of malignant tumor incidence worldwide in 2020 and 5th among females, thereby establishing itself as a significant threat to population health. The primary approaches for treating TC involve surgery, often supplemented by 131I therapy, radiotherapy, endocrine therapy, and biomarker-targeted therapy.

We are pleased to invite you to publish papers spanning basic, translational, and other aspects of thyroid cancer. Original contributions should encompass a broad spectrum of topics within the field, spanning from molecular and cellular biology to immunology, biochemistry, physiology, pathology, and the treatment of both pediatric and adult thyroid cancer. A special emphasis will be placed on thyroid cancer therapy and the molecular mechanisms.

This Special Issue aims to original research articles and comprehensive reviews related to thyroid cancer. We look forward to receiving your contributions.
