This Special Issue of Biomedicines aims to provide a suitable forum to tackle such challenges. We are eager to foster clinical and experimental neuroscientists who wish to share their discoveries about (1) early or predictable diagnosis; (2) the efficacy of an innovative therapy or a novel therapeutic regimen; and (3) the accurate prognosis of neuropsychiatric disorders that are supported by neuroimaging substrates. We welcome original articles, clinical or pre-clinical trial studies, and comprehensive reviews related (but not limited) to:

- Psychiatric neuroimaging;
- Advances of molecular imaging;
- Neuroimaging-informed phenotypes;
- Image-based neuropsychiatric diagnosis and prognosis;
- Drug delivery and pharmacological MRI;
- Translational psychiatry;
- Multimodal neuroimaging;
- Neuromodulation and neurostimulation;
- Personalized and complementary medicine;
- Computational psychiatry;
- Gut-brain interactions.
