Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Lipoproteins are lipid transport molecules that transport plasma lipids and represent risk factors for cardiovascular disease and other metabolic diseases. Understanding lipoproteins and the different ways in which to manipulate their metabolism is an essential step for preventing cardiovascular disease and morbidity in the general population.

The aim of this Special Issue is to provide an update on the latest experimental research focused on lipoproteins and cardiovascular disease, including recent therapeutic strategies for lowering LDL cholesterol or lipoprotein a.

We welcome papers focused on lipoproteins (small dense LDL, apolipoprotein B, lipoprotein a) and cardiovascular disease, including reviews and experimental studies.
