Message from the Guest Editors

With this Special Issue, we want to invite researchers who apply the methods of experimental biology to studying carcinogenesis to submit their original papers as well as comprehensive reviews to stimulate debate, including outside of the mainstream theories. Is cancer a preventable disease? Are genetic factors essential for its development? Is inflammation a pro or a con of carcinogenesis? What do we know about the role of molecular mimicry in carcinogenesis? In how many ways might a vaccine prevent cancer development? These and other questions should stimulate authors during the preparation of their manuscripts.

Cancers is an international online journal addressing both clinical and basic science issues related to cancer research. The journal is publishing in Open Access format, which will certainly evolve to ensure that the journal takes full advantage of the rapidly changing world of information and knowledge dissemination. It publishes high-quality clinical, translational, and basic science research on cancer prevention, initiation, progression, and treatment, as well as other related topics, particularly to capture the most seminal studies in the rapidly growing area of immunology, immunotherapy, and tumor microenvironment.
