Message from the Guest Editor

In recent years, there have been remarkable advances in the knowledge of pediatric esophagus disease, demonstrating the enthusiasm that researchers all over the world have for this field of medicine.

The strategy of surgical treatment is constantly changing and has been the subject of academic discussion. Minimally invasive approaches, interdisciplinary treatment strategies, robotics, endoscopic surgery, and new technologies are of great interest.

The goal of this Special Issue is for academics to discuss any of these mentioned topics and to share their experiences related to this field. Surgeons and researchers are encouraged to contribute their most innovative manuscripts. A variety of contributions to this Special Issue are welcome: papers, review articles, systemic reviews, proposals for new strategic approaches, and prospective/retrospective case studies. I look forward to receiving your contributions.
