Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Pediatric rheumatic diseases (PRDs) are chronic inflammatory systemic diseases caused by autoimmune responses which develop in childhood and are represented by juvenile idiopathic arthritis, systemic lupus erythematosus, dermatomyositis, Sjögren's syndrome, and autoinflammatory diseases.

Nowadays, various biologics and molecular-targeted drugs are available, and remission of PRDs is possible in many children. Besides, the concept of “dreams come true” remission, first introduced by Prof. Takei, is a kind of remission that enables children with PRDs to realize their future dreams without being disrupted by their diseases.

This Special Issue invites the latest reviews and original articles in pediatric rheumatology for the realization of future “dreams come true” remission.
