Message from the Guest Editors

The crystallization of biological macromolecules is still poorly understood and, as a consequence, the success of common trial-and-error experiments is not very predictable. On the other hand, more rational approaches have been developed in the past years, and prospects for the science are in fact good. The topics of the Special Issue are aimed to cover all aspects of biological crystallization and crystallography from basic research on nucleation and crystal growth, to practical developments in crystallization methods and also advanced approaches and new protein crystal structures. New trends and methodologies as well as other structural methods will be encouraged.

Welcome to Crystals, the journal dedicated to the fascinating world of crystallographic research! Crystals are more than mere decorative elements; they hold the key to understanding the fundamental structure of matter. Our mission is to explore the crucial significance of this research across various fields. From medicine to technology, chemistry to geology, crystals play a vital role. Their structure provides insights into new advanced materials, innovative drugs, and groundbreaking technologies. Through Crystals, we delve into the microscopic world to discover solutions that will shape the future. Join us on a journey through the Crystals, where science merges with beauty and innovation.
