Message from the Guest Editors

For this Special Issue of Current Oncology, we are inviting papers from transdisciplinary clinical research teams who address the psychosocial and relational aspects of care for people with cancer at all stages, including advanced cancer, and their primary caregivers. Transdisciplinary has also been termed multidisciplinary or interdisciplinary, and this Special Issue considers how collaborative healthcare teams utilize the unique knowledge of each discipline to provide care. Topics may include consideration of the intersectional identities of individuals and their families, psychosocial interventions and perspectives, education for communication and psychosocial oncology care, as well as existential considerations and health humanities as applied to psychosocial oncology. Additionally, we are keen to ensure that patient populations represent the trajectory of psychosocial care for cancer at all stages, included during palliative care.

Deadline for manuscript submissions:
