Message from the Guest Editor

With the development of technology and the introduction of new biomedical materials, the field of orthodontics has advanced dramatically over the last few decades. The art and science of orthodontic advances in materials, biomechanics, therapies and patient management have changed orthodontics such that therapy is more effective and outcomes are more consistent.

This Special Issue will present new research that supports the new materials and therapies of today. It aims to provide contributions to the development of orthodontics by merging the latest treatment technology and scientific findings into our current treatment. We look forward to receiving original articles, reviews, and clinical research from innovation scholars all over the world.
