Message from the Guest Editors

Professional and social current changes demand adaptation and extension of dental quality issues that affect all three pillars of quality: suitability and ergonomics, communication and assessed quality of dental services, and quality of life of dental professionals affecting professionalism. In addition, to these three pillars modern approach of quality assurance also touches the field of “green dentistry” meaning environmental approaches in the dental office affecting air, water, and equipment. A final touch on sustainability is waste management and other economic strategies. This revised behavior will lead soon to a better quality of dental services (QOS) and quality of life (QOL) for all.

In this special issue we wish to collect data related to:

- QOL of oral health professionals
- educational issues towards communication and collaboration skills in dentistry
- ergonomics in busy dental sectors
- air and water quality in the dental office
- waste management and sustainability of the dental business
- dental marketing and dental branding issues
- strategic analysis of dental business
- quality assurance of dental services
- “green dentistry” issues
