Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to delve into the rapidly evolving field of biomarkers, with a focus on liver diseases of various etiologies including metabolic, alcoholic, and autoimmune pathologies. It seeks to highlight advancements in molecular, genetic, biochemical, and imaging markers that enhance diagnosis, and/or accurately predict disease progression, treatment response, and patient outcomes. Therefore, we cordially invite you to submit comprehensive reviews and original research articles covering the discovery, validation, and clinical translation of these markers. We are particularly interested in contributions exploring innovative non-invasive markers, novel imaging techniques, and emerging laboratory methods. Emphasis will also be placed on the integration of these markers in clinical practice, their potential role in personalized medicine. Our goal is to provide a multidisciplinary platform for scientists and clinicians to share and discuss novel discoveries that will shape future diagnostic and therapeutic strategies in hepatology.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.
