

New Lines of Inquiry in Entrepreneurship – From Business Creation to Economic Prosperity

Guest Editors:

Prof. Tomi Ovaska

Department of Economics,
Youngstown State University,
Youngstown, OH, USA

Prof. Ryo Takashima

Department of Global Studies,
Sophia University, Tokyo, Japan

Deadline for manuscript
submissions:

closed (30 June 2020)

Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Economics research has firmly established that entrepreneurship is a key driver behind successful economies. The research agenda in the field is new, however, with gaps in many areas of inquiry. This Special Issue of Economies aims to showcase an unorthodox mix of articles, which not only highlight the diversity of the field but also inspire researchers in entrepreneurship and related fields to pursue new directions in research. Articles to this issue are welcomed from any academic discipline with a feasible connection to entrepreneurship, how businesses are created and run, and how they contribute to economic development. Both quantitative and qualitative contributions are accepted. Rather than just the traditional economic equation-based modelling, which is in no means discouraged, the authors should aim to write articles that are unique to the field, highlighting the critical function entrepreneurs play in our society and/or identifying factor(s) alleviating that pursuit. Welcome to submit your related manuscripts to this topic.

