

Economics of Migration

Guest Editors:

Dr. Marina-Selini Katsaiti

Department of Regional and Economic Development,
Agricultural University of Athens,
Amfissa, Greece

Dr. Maroula Khraiche

Department of Economics, The University of Texas Rio Grande
Valley, Edinburg, TX, USA

Dr. Mrittika Shamsuddin

Department of Economics,
Dalhousie University, Halifax, NS
B3H 4R2, Canada

Deadline for manuscript
submissions:

30 June 2025

Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Migration is an issue facing most global economies. Countries may act as migration sources, as destinations for migrants, or even as mediating ground. The recent Global Financial Crisis, the Arab Spring, and the internal and external conflicts facing several countries today, along with the continuous difficulties facing populations in various parts of the world, have transformed migration into a multidimensional issue with numerous consequences. The increasing interest of researchers in the field of migration in several disciplines has served to verify the existing trends and indicates the need to perform further work to address the issues and suggest informed policies. In this Special Issue, Economies is inviting researchers and academicians to submit their work related to “Economics of Migration”. Both empirical and theoretical work fit the scope of the Special Issue, with interdisciplinary work highly encouraged.

Dr. Marina-Selini Katsaiti

Dr. Maroula Khraiche

Dr. Mrittika Shamsuddin

Guest Editors

