Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue explores the use of emerging technologies in various educational settings, such as K-12, higher education, organizational training, and informal learning environments, to address challenges related to teaching, learning, and performance. From AI, VR, and AR, to personalized learning platforms, gamification, and robotics, we seek to understand and provide evidence of the potential of these tools in fostering meaningful learning experiences and outcomes.

We ask how educators can harness these technologies to create effective, interactive, practical, inclusive, and/or immersive learning experiences and what challenges and ethical considerations arise as we integrate these emerging technologies into formal and informal learning spaces to address education and training needs.
