Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

In today's rapidly changing world, it is crucial to recognize the need for renewing vocational education to address the evolving demands of the job market, the pervasive influence of technology and the shifting expectations of new generations. This Special Issue aims to explore the latest advancements and innovative approaches in vocational education and training (VET), with a specific focus on enhancing lifelong skills. By examining these key aspects, we can identify strategies and practices that will empower individuals to thrive in their careers and contribute to the growth and development of society.

The Special Issue will cover topics:

- Pedagogical advancements (e.g., the flipped classroom, personalized learning or HyFlex teaching delivery modes);
- Emerging technologies (e.g., artificial intelligence, robotics or simulations);
- Strategies to ensure the relevance and effectiveness of VET in a rapidly evolving job market (e.g., industry partnerships or DUAL systems);
- The contribution of VET in developing personal and professional life projects in a changing world of work and success values (e.g., adaptive learning, modularization or micro-credentials);
