Message from the Guest Editors

Everyone will know if the Internet of Everything (IoE) is different from Internet of Things (IoT). In fact, many parts of the world have smart technology. For example: smart home, smart city, smart health; it is all around us.

The aim of this Special Issue is to report on new scenarios, technologies, and applications related to the concept of the Internet of Everything and discuss challenges and risks. IoT is devices that connect to each other, but IoE adds elements to people, and elements of data, and is an extension of IoT.

Topics of this Special Issue include, but are not limited to:

- Intelligent applications for IoE ecosystems;
- AloE for edge and fog computing;
- AloE in healthcare applications;
- IoE application pilots and experimentation;
- Innovative wireless network architectures for the IoE;
- Privacy issues;
- Scalability issues;
- Interaction models for the IoE;
- Innovative digital signal processing for the IoE;
- low-power IoT protocols.
