Message from the Guest Editors

Foods are very important for human nutrition supplement and health maintenance, among which various functional ingredients in foods play a decisive role. However, in the process of food consumption or processing, a considerable number of functional ingredients are destroyed or discarded along with by-products. Therefore, it is of great significance to recycle and make high value use of these functional ingredients. Development of new analytical methods, green extraction technology, biotransformation technology, high-value processing technology, and study the effects of different processing technologies on bioavailability and bioactivity of these functional ingredients in foods are important ways to achieve this goal. This Special Issue aims to collect the most recent advances in the recovery and application of high-value resources from foods and food by-products and provide platform for related articles.
