Message from the Guest Editors

The importance of safe and high-quality food products is undeniable. Consumer demand for increased food quality and safety assurances has led to the food industry and services providing verifiable proof. In addition, consumers are taking an extraordinary interest in how food is produced, processed, and marketed and are continuously calling for their governments to accept greater responsibility for food safety and consumer protection. Moreover, the global food trade places substantial obligations on importing and exporting countries to strengthen their food control systems and implement risk-based food control strategies. Therefore, in order to reduce assessment inconsistencies and production costs, rapid, reliable, and robust analysis technology for food quality and safety is desperately needed, which encourages us to assemble the latest studies into this Special Issue, entitled “Rapid Analysis Technology for Food Quality and Safety.”
