Message from the Guest Editor

Tea is the most consumed flavored functional beverage in the world. A large amount of scientific data have shown that the health beneficial effects of tea are mainly attributed to its more than a thousand biochemical compounds. We invite you to share your recent in vitro or in vivo findings in the fields of antioxidants, anti-inflammation, cancer prevention, reduced occurrence of heart disease, neurodegenerative disease, Alzheimer's disease, etc. Moreover, different types of processing allow us to obtain new compounds by synthesis or degradation. Manuscripts on the isolation and purification of new monomers are also welcome. Submitted manuscripts should not have been published previously elsewhere.
