Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The goal of this Special Issue is to provide an extensive overview of the effects that air pollution have on human and ecosystems health, promoting approaches from ecology and social science that are able to define the indicators of the impact, quantifying their impacts either in monetary terms or for impairing the structure and function of ecosystems. This Special Issue can contribute to upgrading the state-of-the-art, to prioritize the intervention in air quality policy as a means of making cities resilient and sustainable, as established under the eleventh Sustainable Development Goals (SDG 11), inasmuch the preservation of GI functionality as a mean to counteract climate change and its impact (SDG 13).
