Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This commemorative Special Issue is dedicated to the life and work of Peter J. Aspinall, a prolific and innovative social scientist, and a generous and supportive colleague and friend. Over the years, Peter worked across many fields, from urban and regional analysis and health services research, to public health, ethnicity terminology and classifications, and mixed ethnic identities, inspiring many with his breadth and depth of knowledge and insight. His work was both theoretical and practical, drawing out key sociological and policy issues and seeking to make real change, providing that often elusive link between theorization and grounded work.

In this Special Issue, original research articles and reviews of Peter's work are welcome, as well as more personal reflections on working with Peter over the years.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.

The journal is also interested in biographical studies and their contribution to the understanding of broader social and historical phenomena.
