Message from the Guest Editor

ICU nursing practice includes crucial clinical decisions based on the best available scientific evidence, clinical experience, and patient preferences. ICU nurses carry out specific, autonomous, or complementary interventions of a technical–scientific, managerial, relational, and educational nature; plan healthcare assistance through scientifically validated tools; and identify, analyze, calculate, and treat risks related to care provision by systematically evaluating healthcare outcomes.

This Special Issue of Healthcare is dedicated to offering an overview of these activities. Topics that will be included are:

Nursing care protocols (sedation, pain, nutrition, etc.);
Delirium;
Sleep;
Infections;
Pressure ulcers;
Mobilization;
Recording;
Relatives;
Oncology ICU patients;
Elderly patients.

Experts from all specialties are encouraged to submit original research, project reports, short reports, reviews, and opinion papers.
