Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

The skin, as the body's largest organ, provides a border to our environment, but also represents one of several ways to communicate with it. Like all organs, skin requires good care to fulfill all its tasks. The nails are skin appendages that are often neglected by those without a special interest in their beauty, care and disease spectrum.

This Special Issue will tackle important facts about skin and nail care from birth to old age. It is not intended to substitute a dermatologic textbook, but rather to update some important aspects of knowledge in this area.
