

Special Issue

Advances of Oral Surgery in Dental and Facial Conditions

Message from the Guest Editor

A number of new challenges surface every day in dental science in the context of the post-pandemic period, the emergence of new pathologies, and digitization and technological innovation, all of which create high expectations among patients, especially in oral and maxillofacial surgery. This Special Issue aims to collect contributions in the form of original articles and/or reviews on the importance of new forms of training of the new generations of oral surgeons, oral pathologies, regenerative dentistry, technological innovation in oral and maxillofacial surgery, rehabilitation surgery (including post-oncological surgery), and focus on the forensic side of dental science and medicine.
