Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to collect research articles and reviews on original and innovative research regarding applications, new methodologies, and case studies addressed to characterize stones and geomaterials, increase knowledge in decay processes and support preservation tools of stone-built heritage

- Decay phenomena (physical, chemical, biological anthropogenic processes, tests on site and/or in laboratories) of stones and geomaterials used in built heritage;
- Innovative multi-analytical approaches applied to built heritage in order to increase knowledge of its deterioration and preservation;
- New tools for the built heritage preservation;
- Indoor and outdoor climate and microclimate monitoring;
- Materials and treatments; climate impact; digitalisation and documentation;
- Innovative multi-analytical approaches applied to built heritage in order to increase knowledge of its deterioration and preservation;
- Non-invasive technologies applied in built heritage for new conservative approaches;
- New archeometric techniques.

We welcome the submission of manuscripts that include research and case studies featuring the conservation of built heritage.
