

Shipwreck Archaeology

Guest Editor:

Dr. Deborah Cvikel

Leon Recanati Institute for Maritime Studies and Department of Maritime Civilizations, University of Haifa,
Haifa 3498838, Israel

Deadline for manuscript submissions:

closed (31 December 2022)

Message from the Guest Editor

Dear Colleagues,

This volume is dedicated to shipwreck archaeology, a discipline evolving over the last 70 years. A shipwreck and its artifacts represent a moment frozen in time, and underwater archaeology can offer a unique opportunity to explore it, contributing new and valuable information, and enriching our understanding of the past.

The underwater excavation of a shipwreck is an expensive and demanding task, influenced by the time available and weather constraints. Its aim, based on its archaeological remains and that of its contents, is to provide not only a detailed description of its construction, but also to describe the original ship, life aboard, the ship's origin, the route of its last voyage and information on trade.

Original research articles or comprehensive reviews are invited on the following or related topics:

- Cargoes and special artifacts
- The human factor: shipwrights, crew, passengers
- In-situ conservation and preservation of shipwrecks
- Studies in ancient ship construction
- Underwater excavation and documentation methods

Dr. Deborah Cvikel

Guest Editor

