Message from the Guest Editors

This special issue intends to provide the scientific community with evidence on both the aspects of psychological suffering experienced by health professionals during the pandemic (with its correlates such as burnout, post-traumatic stress syndrome, and ethical conflicts), and the coping strategies, resilience and adjustment processes they experienced and enacted during the pandemic.

Knowing the sources of psychological distress but also how to cope with them, is expected to contribute towards the knowledge base in order to cope effectively with current and future health emergencies.

This Special Issue of the International Journal of Environmental Research and Public Health (IJERPH) focuses on mental health care and promotion in healthcare professionals. We encourage the submission of original research papers (both qualitative and quantitative), reviews, meta-analyses, and case studies that contribute new knowledge in this area. Interventional studies, trials, and epidemiological studies are also encouraged. The focus may include a specific population.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Addressing the environmental and public health challenges requires engagement and collaboration among clinicians and public health researchers. Discovery and advances in this research field play a critical role in providing a scientific basis for decision-making toward control and prevention of human diseases, especially the illnesses that are induced from environmental exposure to health hazards. IJERPH provides a forum for discussion of discoveries and knowledge in these multidisciplinary fields. Please consider publishing your research in this high quality, peer-reviewed, open access journal.

Author Benefits

Open Access: free for readers, with article processing charges (APC) paid by authors or their institutions.

High Visibility: indexed within Scopus, PubMed, MEDLINE, PMC, Embase, GEOBASE, CAPlus / SciFinder, and other databases.
