Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue is open to any aspects of mental health and psychological well-being among migrants, ethnic minorities, refugees, asylum seekers, unaccompanied minors, indigenous populations, so-called second-generation migrants, undocumented migrants, and foreign-origin populations, both adults and children. Mental health aspects include, but are not limited to, reducing mental health inequalities and disparities, developing mental health services and mental health care solutions, improving access to and solving barriers to accessing mental health care, using psychoeducation, supporting mental health, assessing traumatization and treating traumas, developing psychotherapy and other treatments, preventing mental health problems, identifying factors associated with psychological well-being and psychological ill-health, improving the cultural competence of mental health workers, and investigating psychological assessments. We welcome both quantitative and qualitative empirical original studies and comprehensive review articles. The listed keywords below suggest a few of the many possible topics covered by submitted manuscripts.

Message from the Editor-in-Chief

Addressing the environmental and public health challenges requires engagement and collaboration among clinicians and public health researchers. Discovery and advances in this research field play a critical role in providing a scientific basis for decision-making toward control and prevention of human diseases, especially the illnesses that are induced from environmental exposure to health hazards. IJERPH provides a forum for discussion of discoveries and knowledge in these multidisciplinary fields. Please consider publishing your research in this high quality, peer-reviewed, open access journal.
