Enzymes are efficient molecular catalysts in nature that work under ambient pressures and temperatures and catalyse a large variety of chemical reactions by using environmentally benign systems. There is much to learn from nature on how to convert chemicals into useful products. In particular, enzymes react very fast and often, these fleeting intermediates are difficult to trap and characterize. Over the past few years, major breakthroughs in understanding enzymatic catalysis have been obtained and highlights of novel research problems and solutions are the topic of this Special Issue. This Special Issue will welcome review, opinion, and research articles that focus on, but are not limited to, the above topics.

The International Journal of Molecular Sciences (IJMS) is an open access journal, which was established in 2000. The journal aims to provide a forum for scholarly research on a range of topics, including biochemistry, molecular and cell biology, and molecular biophysics. IJMS publishes both original research and review articles, and regularly publishes special issues to highlight advances at the cutting edge of research. We invite you to read recent articles published in IJMS and consider publishing your next paper with us.

Author Benefits

Open Access: free for readers, with article processing charges (APC) paid by authors or their institutions.

High Visibility: indexed within Scopus, SCIE (Web of Science), PubMed, PMC, MEDLINE, Embase, CAPlus / SciFinder, and other databases.

Journal Rank: JCR - Q1 (Biochemistry and Molecular Biology) / CiteScore - Q1 (Organic Chemistry)
