Message from the Guest Editor

Bone Marrow Aspirate Concentrate (BMAC) therapies have been employed for more than 30 years to treat pathologies across a multitude of medical fields. The use of autologous BMAC biological formulations has resulted in considerable interest and discussions.

This Special Issue welcomes and encourages the submission of research articles and full reviews providing insight and information on the latest developments in BMAC molecular research, patient outcomes for musculoskeletal and spine diseases, as well as new applications of BMAC such as in fertility diseases, neuroinflammation, and degenerative diseases.
