Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

Endometrial cancer (EC) is the most common cancer of the female reproductive tract in developed countries. Its incidence is continuously rising, along with its death rate, as the population is aging, the obesity rates are increasing, and the prognosis of certain types of EC, mainly non-endometrioid EC, remains debatable.

For this Special Issue, we welcome the submission of original reports or comprehensive review articles addressing the current state of targeted therapy of EC or future perspectives emerging from the identification of promising novel targets for EC therapy.
