This thematic Special Issue will focus on the immune system as an active participant in hematology and hematologic diseases. Immune cells and soluble mediators are major components of blood and lymphoid tissues, are involved directly in immune-mediated hematologic diseases, and are used as diagnostic and therapeutic tools in all aspects of hematology.

We welcome research or review papers on immune system involvement in hematology, including, but not limited to, the following topics:

1. The role of immune cells and cytokines in hematology and hematologic diseases;
2. Immune biomarkers for hematologic diseases;
3. Immunomodulators in hematology and hematologic diseases;
4. Immunotherapeutic approaches to hematologic diseases (including CAR T-cells);
5. Immunodiagnostic tools for hematologic diseases.
