Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

This Special Issue aims to gather contributions in the area of research we have thus defined. In particular, because of the preventive importance of being able to identify conditions at risk of developing bipolar disorder, this contribution aims to gather information on new genetic, laboratory, and more generally diagnostic techniques that may make it possible to identify the risk area, described by the above-mentioned new line of research, of future bipolar disorder.

Contributors are welcome to use the formats of an original research article, brief research report, systematic review, review, mini-review, policy and practice review, hypothesis and theory, perspective, case report, community case study, general commentary, or opinion.

Message from the Editorial Board

There has been an explosion of gene and target based research and therapeutics in the multitude of fields that compose clinical medicine. The Journal of Clinical Medicine's (JCM) staff and editorial board are dedicated to providing cutting edge, timely, and peer-reviewed articles covering the diverse subspecialties of clinical medicine. The journal publishes concise, innovative, and exciting research articles as well as clinically significant articles and reviews that are pertinent to the myriad of disciplines within medicine. The articles published are relevant to both primary care physicians and specialists. The journal's full-texts are archived in PubMed Central and indexed in PubMed. Please consider submitting your manuscripts for publication to our journal and check us out on-line!
