Message from the Guest Editors

Dear Colleagues,

The creation of mobile and fixed dental prostheses represents a fundamental chapter of rehabilitation dental medicine. Today, technological and digital applications aim to create increasingly assisted procedures, with the goal of designing repeatable and predictable therapeutic protocols to allow the dentist increasingly precise and simplified procedures with a significant reduction in human error. This Special Issue will collect manuscripts describing new procedures and new therapeutic approaches in order to optimize the results obtainable in both fixed and removable prostheses.
