Message from the Guest Editors

This Special Issue aims to collect the most recent findings regarding diagnosis and management of patients affected by SAD with lung involvement. We believe that this focused approach will significantly contribute to current knowledge on this topic. Another purpose of this Special Issue is to stimulate the scientific debate and a closer collaboration between pulmonologists and rheumatologists aimed at a mutual sharing of competences.

In this Special Issue, original research articles, brief reports of original data and reviews are welcome. Research areas may include (but should not be limited to) the following:

- Diagnostic approach to SAD patients with lung involvement;
- Imaging techniques for assessment of SAD-related lung involvement, including application of artificial intelligence to HRCT analysis;
- Risk factors for lung involvement in SAD patients;
- Prognosis of SAD with lung involvement;
- Pathogenic mechanisms underlying lung involvement in SAD;
- Multidisciplinary evaluation of SAD patients with lung involvement;
- Therapeutic strategies for SAD-related lung involvement.

We look forward to receiving your contributions.
