Message from the Guest Editor

In recent years, minimally invasive techniques for aortic valve repair or replacement have shown exciting early and late outcomes.

This Special Issue will focus on innovative research in aortic valve management, based on a custom-made treatment in the clinical practice, paying particular attention to the mechanism and factor involved in the prognosis of these patients, such as early diagnosis with several imaging modalities, the risk stratification, the optimal timing for intervention and the type of procedure to offer.

Thus, I invite colleagues to submit their original research and communications as well as systemic reviews and meta-analyses on the following topics:

Minimally invasive aortic valve surgery;
Transcatheter aortic valve replacement;
Aortic valve repair techniques;
New tissue valves, especially in younger patients.

Case series and case reports will be only considered if of particular interest.
